- 25X1 1. The Sveti Petar textile factory in Savinja Valley, formerly the Ogrižek and Temelj Factory, is located two kilometers south of Sveti Petar on the bank of the Savinja River. The factory produces light cotton fabrics, known as "oxford", cretonne, "Molino" linen (called people's linen), and linen for pillows, napkins and underwear. Daily production only amounts to 3,500 meters through a lack of cotton. The work is carried out in two shifts of eight hours each, although almost half (45 percent) of the machines remain idle. Daily production could reportedly be achieved in one shift if all the machinery were utilized.
2. Sixty per cent of the cotton is imported; the remaining forty per cent is obtained from old rags. The resultant material is of poor quality. Raw material arrives from the Skofja Loka, Litija and Maribor spinning establishments. The factory receives a maximum of 10,000 kilograms of cotton a month; 28,000 kilograms allegedly would be needed for the factory's capacity. No reserves are maintained and the factory is completely dependent on each new shipment of yarn.
3. Factory machinery includes twenty large weaving machines of the Rocher model, with a work length of 180 centimeters, and 84 narrow weaving machines, with a work length of 110 centimeters, of the Rocher and Thille (sic) models. All the machines are old.
4. Factory management includes the following:

Director

- Rudi Hribar
